Course/Course Description:

This course explores film as a medium across cultural and historical contexts. It covers films in its varied form, from the first projections in the late 19th century to online distribution today. Using examples of noteworthy films, it takes an introductory examination of the most important film theories and concepts, in the process examining how ideologies and meanings are imbedded in this vibrant medium.

Prerequisites: None

Aims and Objectives:

The course aims to:

- Consider conceptual frameworks for critically assessing issues related to the cultural production of film, including technological changes and industrial innovations.
- Introduce and discuss the major theoretical approaches in this field including genre and narrative theories, feminism, montage and associated ideologies.
- Discuss, understand and develop a critical awareness of the ways in which film production and consumption are related to issues of power in society, cultural identities, and the relationship between identity and one's place in society.

- Use a variety of resources (such as class discussions, artifacts, books, articles and the Internet) to critically engage with the theoretical approaches.

Programme Outcomes :

4A(iii); 4B(i); 4B(ii); 4B(iii); 4C(i); 4C(iii); 4D(i)

A detailed list of the programme outcomes are found in the Programme Specification. This is located at the Departmental page of the portal.

Learning Outcomes:

- Use theoretical frameworks that will enable them to understand the processes of film production and consumption and begin to identify strengths and weaknesses between these frameworks.
- Understand how conceptions and representations of national, cultural, gendered and sexualized identities may be apparent in films.
- Critically engage with theoretical debates and relate them to cinematic experiences.
- Develop a range of general intellectual knowledge and transferable skills such as the ability to critique interpretations of filmic narratives; understand and evaluate complex arguments; and engage in clear written communication on these topics.
- Act with limited autonomy under direction or supervision and engages in evaluation of own work and capabilities and outputs in key areas of film studies.
