Course Description:

Social psychological processes influence how we perceive, judge, remember, and behave toward people. These processes shape, and are shaped by, our social expectations, social roles, social goals, and social interactions. This course is designed to illustrate the relationship between the individual and society and to demonstrate the multiple ways that social psychology can be applied to the individual - society interface in specific topic areas. Students are encouraged to critically reflect on the strengths and weaknesses of various social psychology theories, to consider their research methods and their applications to real life situations.

Prerequisites:

PSY 3100 Foundations in Psychology

PSY 4205 Conceptual and Historical Issues in Psychology

Aims and Objectives:

During this course, students will be encouraged to critically reflect on the range and power of the influence people have on the thoughts, feelings, and the behaviours of others. They will also get the chance to develop a detailed awareness of the connections between social psychological theories and their applications and will also be able to critically evaluate these. Furthermore, the course aims at developing students' critical thinking skills in relation to research, as they will be given the opportunity to examine research methods used to understand social attitudes and behaviour. Finally, a major objective of this course is to demonstrate how social psychological research may be applied to real life social problems, such as violence and intergroup conflict.

Programme Outcomes:

5A.i, 5A.ii, 5B.iii, 5C.i, 5C.iii, 5D.i, 5Dii

A detailed list of the programme outcomes are found in the Programme Specification.
